SEALASKA HERITAGE INSTITUTE is sponsoring a Heritage Language Development Workshop for language teachers and curriculum developers.

Presented by Jim MacDiarmid, SHI's new Education Director. Mr. MacDiarmid has a Masters Degree in Education and Linguistics and extensive experience in bilingual and cross-cultural education and professional experience across Alaska and Canada. He also has worked with several rural school districts throughout the state. His most well known publication is Replacing Thing-a-ma-jig – The Developmental Language Process.

This workshop will introduce the participants to both long and short term planning, for second language teaching. Practical, hands-on activities, based on a developmental language process, will be introduced and demonstrated. The training will include language teaching for kindergarten through the high school grades and will present a format for using already developed classroom materials. How to assess the students' progress in the language program will also be covered.
